

Arabic and Albanian speaking youth warmly welcome the book Tweeting with GOD, in which no topic is taboo

The innovative approach has made Tweeting with GOD an internationally selling book, being published in 17 languages. The Albanian translation was launched on the 17th of May in Pristina, in attendance of delegations from Kosovo and Albania. The Arabic translation was recently warmly welcomed in the presence of hundreds of people in Lebanon.

Thanks to its accurate, reliable content presented in simple language and combined with a multimedia approach, the initiative has gained popularity amongst different generations and in many countries. Using creative methods to reach people inside and outside the Church, the author Father Michel Remery helps young people to find answers to over 200 daring questions about God, faith and life.

Ninette Kamel, a reader from Lebanon was impressed of the range of questions addressed in the book: “I found many answers to my questions. I proudly say, that this book touched me, it helped me to find peace and reinforced my relationship with God.”

Fr. Remery's tech-savvy approach is unique in that his responses are in Posts or Tweets of just a few words — so that the answer is accessible to the shortest of attention spans. "If we wish to help young people to find answers to faith-related questions, we have to use modern language and new forms of communication," explained Fr. Remery "We need to go and meet young people where they are. If they are online, the Church should also be there."

Originally intended for young people, today the initiative Tweeting with GOD is being used by all generations. The book shows how it is logical to believe, even in the 21st century. The questions explore a broad range of topics and aspects of the faith. Together with the users, the author embarks on a quest for argumentations and the reason why, whilst he does not shy away from the most challenging questions.

The book is interactive with a mobile app available through the Google Play and Apple stores. The app allows users to follow Mass in over 15 languages, and contains all the basic Catholic prayers, very useful in a world where we are always on the go. An accompanying manual helps youth leaders to sit down with others to discuss faith-related questions and search for answers together.

"Combines the timeless teaching of our faith with the best of modern technology."
